BETTY ORVIS' WEDDING SURPRISE TO FRIENDS

Unexpectedly Married On Parents' Golden Anniversary.

ON CHRISTMAS NIGHT

Ceremony Witnessed by Bride's Family—Lewis B. Harvey, the Groom, Arrived in Town to Spend Holidays - On Their Honeymoon.

To the complete surprise of her many friends Miss Caroline Elizabeth Orvis, youngest daughter of Judge and Mrs. Ellis L. Orvis, suddenly rearranged her wedding plans and on Christmas night was married to Lewis B. Harvey, of Philadelphia. The occasion was also the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of the bride's parents. So suddenly was it all planned and so quietly was everything executed that not until the happy young couple were wedded and on their honeymoon did the news become public.

All of "Betty" Orvis' friends knew that she planned to be married but by none was it thought that the wedding would occur before spring and possibly not before next fall. The bride herself had no thought of an early wedding, nor did the groom, when he arrived in Bellefonte to spend Christmas at the Orvis home.

Twenty-five years ago that Christmas night Judge and Mrs. Orvis were married. Their wedding, as was that of their daughter, was suddenly arranged and occurred much earlier than was first planned. The spirit of the holidays and of the celebration of the event of twenty-five years ago filled the Orvis home and Mr. Harvey urged Miss Orvis to consent to an immediate wedding. He had been in ill health and was about to start on a two weeks' vacation. Miss Orvis, with her trousseau but partly completed, finally agreed. Rev. Dr. J. Allison Platts was summoned and in the presence of none but the immediate family of the bride the ceremony was performed. It was not until several hours later that the most intimate friends of the bride heard the first inkling of the affair. At first they could scarcely believe their ears but inquiry at the Orvis home confirmed the news.

The young bride is one of the most beautiful girls in Bellefonte and has a host of friends. Mr. Harvey is a young banker and is located in Philadelphia. The young couple will make their home in Philadelphia

WILLIAMSON—BEATES.

A very pretty wedding took place at Pine Glenn on Dec. 18th at one o'clock in the Methodist Episcopal church The contracting parties were Miss Isabel Beates, the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Beates, and Mr. Raymond Williamson, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Williamson, of Moshannon. Miss Isabel Smith, of Lock Haven, a cousin of the bride, was the bridesmaid, and William Williamson, brother of the groom, was best man. Miss M. Ellen Loy played the wedding march. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion and and the ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Ruch under an arch of evergreen and Epworth League colors. After receiving congratulations of the fifty guests present the young couple with the relatives and intimate friends went to the bride's home where a delicious wedding dinner awaited them. The bride is a very popular young lady and will make a good housekeeper. Mr. Williamson is an estimable young man and is qualified in every way to become the head of a home. After a short wedding trip the young couple went to house keeping in Moshannon with the best wishes for a long and prosperous life of of all who knew them. Mr. Williamson is employed at that place.

RISHEL—HOGARTH.

Old Dan Cupid laughed merrily at advancing years when on Tuesday of last week John Rishel came to town and led Mrs. Elizabeth J. Hogarth to the altar, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Dr. J Allison Platts. Mr. Rishel is 78 years. His bride is 46.

Emerging from the parsonage after the wedding ceremony Mr. Rishel beamed with happiness. His bride was also smiling.

"Of course, I'm happy" said Mr. Rishel. "I've got the best woman in the world."

SASS—SHARP.

Bellefonte friends of the bride will be interested in the announcement of the wedding on Thursday of last week of Emil Sass, of Pittsburg, and Miss Bessie Sharp. The bride is a daughter of James Sharp and formerly resided at Bellefonte.

LEATHERS—HARVEY

Pretty Wedding of Well Known Couple at State College.

One of the prettiest weddings of the Christmas season was that at State College at high noon on Wednesday of last week. The contracting parties were Mr. Alfred Cookman Leathers and Miss Alma Rebecca Harvey, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Harvey, of State College. The groom is a member of the well known firm of Leathers Bros., of Howard.

The Harvey Residence was beautifully decorated with Christmas greens and fully one hundred guests were in attendance for the happy event. As the College bell tolled the hour of noon the bride appeared on the arm of her father and attended by her sister Miss Kathryn Harvey, as bridesmaid. With the groom was his brother, J. T. Leathers, as best man. Little Pauline Neff and Rosetta Yearick, nieces of the bride were flower girls. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. McKendree Reiley pastor of the Methodist Episcopol Church. At the conclusion of the ceremony a reception was held after which a splendid welding breakfast was served. Anticipating more or less difficulty in getting started on their honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Leathers had two automobiles in readiness. With some clever strategy they finally managed to escape in one of the cars and making a fast run to Milesburg caught the afternoon train at that place. They are spending their honeymoon at Old Point Comfort, Virginia, and on their return will reside at Howard. Mr. and Mrs. Leathers were the recipients of many beautiful and costly wedding gifts from admiring friends at State College, Howard, Bellefonte, Lock Haven, Williamsport and other places.

BLAIR—BIBLE.

A pretty wedding of interest to a wide circle of friends in Bellefonte was that in Philadelphia on Tuesday evening, December 28th., when Miss Helen Marie Bible became the bride of Reno Russel Blair, of this place. The ceremony was performed at 6 o'clock at the home of [illegible] 142 North Fiftieth Street, West Philadelphia. Miss Isabel Snowden, of Philadelphia, was maid of honor. The groom was attended by his brother, Dr. H. A. Blair, of Curwensville. Mr. and Mrs. Blair will reside on Curtin street. Mr. Blair is a son of Frank P. Blair and is associated with the latter in the jewelry business. He is a young man of many splendid qualities and has a host of friends with whom we join in extending congratulations and best wishes.

HOMAN—KREBS.

Last Wednesday Waldo Homan and his fiancee, Miss May Krebs, surprised their friends by stealing a march and slipping away to Altoona, where they were married by Rev. Ralph Bergstresser. They returned to Oak Hall on Saturday, a fine wedding supper awaiting them at the Homan home and that night being made lively by a crowd of serenaders. The groom is a hustling young farmer and a son of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Homan. The bride is a charming young lady and is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Krebs, of the Glades.

SHOLL—ARMSTRONG.

William Sholl gave his friends a surprise on Monday of last week when he and Mrs. Mame Reedy Armstrong were united in marriage by Rev. John Hewitt. So quietly was the wedding planned that few persons learned of it until after Mr. and Mrs. Sholl had departed on the night train. They will reside at Jersey City, N. J., where the groom is employed.

Appointed Freight Agent.

The many friends of William T. Kelley will be delighted to know that on Monday last he was notified of his appointment as freight agent for the Pennsylvania Railroad at this place. He succeeds the late John I. Potter. Immediately following the death of Mr. Potter Mr. Kelley was appointed acting agent. This is now made permanent. In his long service with the Pennsylvania Railroad Mr. Kelley has qualified himself for the position to which he is thus promoted. His appointment will meet the approval of the business community.

The following letters remain unclaimed at the postoffice for the last week: J. W Emil, E. G. Feldman, John R. Hurenna, Thomas J. Leisey, T. J Madden, Charles Miles, M. A. GOLD COIN VALUES

Collectors Eager for Coins Against Which Public Was Warned.

The advance in value of rare American gold coins is strikingly manifested by a comparison of the prices paid recently and in the period between 1860 and 1895, says the Washington Post. For some reason collectors formerly took little interest in coins struck in gold. It was not that the investment required was too great, for they paid high prices for the early rare American cents, but they simply did not seem to fancy gold coins, and what are now considered the greatest coin rarities went for the proverbial song.

One of the best illustrations of the advance is shown by the price brought this year by the two unique $50 gold pieces for which W. H. Woodin, of New York, paid the world's record price, or $10,000 each. Veteran dealers in coins declare that it is by no means an exaggeration to say that in 1877, the year of the issue of the $50 pieces mentioned, very few collectors would have bought them at their bullion value in gold for $100. This statement is borne out by the records of coin sales in the latter part of the seventies. Some of the rarest of the gold pattern coins, in which series the $50 pieces are classed, sold then for little more then face value. Now the same coins would bring a hundred times as much.

One of the rarest of American gold coins is the $5 gold piece made by the private minting firm of Dubosq & Co., at San Francisco, in 1850. In 1884 a specimen of this coin offered in auction brought only $6.40. That was the last and the only time the Dubosq $5 piece has been offered for sale. As a matter of fact, the specimen sold is the only one of which there is any record. Even the Mint cabinet at Philadelphia does not contain one of these pieces. It is not known where this solitary specimen is now. Its value can only be guessed at.

A specimen of the New York gold doubloon, made by Ephraim Brasher in 1787, which holds a record of $6200, brought only $450 in 1889 when the collection of R. C. David was disposed of at auction, while several years previously, at the Bushnell sale in 1882, an equally well preserved specimen sold for $505.

Hints For Stock Owners.

A man with only one cow or one sheep should care for that one—see that it has plenty of fresh water and good feed—as if he had a hundred. These's where the honest pennies come in.

Hogs will take good care of themselves if provided with the means for doing it.

As a rule hogs that will weigh about 250 pounds are most in demand in the market. When heavier there will be some fault found.

There are many breeds of hogs and all have their partisans; but any hog is a good hog that will keep on growing into money every day. However, no breed will do this without intelligent care.

A blanket is to a horse what an overcoat is to a man. He needs it when not in active work.

It is best to turn colts in the open paddock or small field near the stable every fine day for exercise.

One great reason why we have to use medicine for sick horses is that we do not use good sense in feeding and caring for them.

If you do not want your horses to look like buffaloes next spring, you must keep using the currycomb industriously and thoroughly every day.

Go down to the barn every night after supper and see that everything is all right with the stock.

Better sell half the stock and give all of the feed to what remains than to stint the whole herd.

How many thousands of dollars are farmers going to lose during the coming winter by letting the stock run down?

Give the man who is inclined to smoke in the barn a kindly invitation to do his smoking somewhere else. In half an hour one spark of fire can undo the work of years.

The windward side of a fodder stack is a poor place to fatten sheep.

If the most profit is to be realized, lambs should be well finished before being marketed.

Protect sheep from cold rains. The fleece will hold a large amount of water, and it takes a long time to dry.

To sell a half-fat lamb is a losing transaction.

Inexperienced feeders have sold lambs supposed to be fat, which more experienced feeders purchased and finished and thereby reaped the bigger profit.

A Traveling Salesman.

H. F. Beers, 617th Ave. Peoria, Ill., writes: "I have been troubled for some time with kidney trouble, so severely at times I could scarcely carry my grips. After using one bottle of Foley's Kidney Pills I have been entirely relieved, and cheerfully recommend them to all." Foley's Kidney Pills are healing and antiseptic and will restore health and strength. Sold by C. M. Parrish.

DROP IN A NICKEL

You Can Then Use the Typewriter for Half an Hour.

The nickel-in-the-slot typewriter is numbered among "the latest," says the St. Louis Times. You have never used one and the chances are have never heard of them before. Just the same they exist, and are soon to be installed through out the world in leading hotels on ocean liners, trains, etc.

The typewriter works along the same principles as the nickel-in-the-slot piano. For the "small sum of 5 cents, ladies and gentlemen," the piano dashes off a prescribed amount of music. The typewriter with its slot attachment, unlocks when the nickel has been placed in the waiting mouth, and for half an hour permits one to use it the way all the typewriters are used.

At the end of this time, however. it locks itself up again, and one's unfinished letter will never be finished on it unless another nickel is used, and then, as half hours come around, another and still another.

These typewriters are put up on slender roller tables. When the guest at the hotel notifies the clerk that he has some letters to write and wants a typewriter, a page is dispatched with one of the nickel-in-the-slot machines. If the guest is ignorant of the manner in which it works and fails to ask an explanation, the chances are that after he has fussed and banged uselessly at it for a time there will be something doing over the telephone wires that lead to the office.

The laconic voice of the clerk saying "Just put a nickel in the slot and you'll be all right," is apt to elicit a reply that is any but complimentary, rounded up by the question "Why in blazes didn't you tell me that long ago?"

But all this will happen only while the typewriter is only a novelty. There is no doubt that in time it will become as much of an accepted fact as the nickel-in-the-slot-telephone the right of which to gobble up nickels is never questioned or mistaken, even by the most uninitiated of city visitors.

"One of the reasons for the installation of the typewriters," said a well-known hotel man the other day, "is that there are so few people who really know how to use a machine. Those who are used to typewriting and want them for service are willing to pay a nickel. The nickel demand, on the other hand, prevents them from being called for by those who merely wish to experiment or fool with the typewriters."

Mystery of the Sugar Frauds.

So it seems that the Sugar Trust is [illegible] of the government. Because of underweights and undervaluations the Trust has paid $2,135,000 into the Treasury of the United States. But while the rascality at the Trust's wharves was in progress, the great independent concern of the Arbuckles was benefiting through underweights, and it has settled up with Uncle Sam to the tune of $695,573. Finally, we have the National Sugar Refining Company under investigation and with a prospect of stepping up to the captain's office and paying over a goodly amount.

There is something decidedly entertaining in the manner in which Mr. Post-president of the American company, discusses the discoveries of the government's. So far as Mr. Post knows, neither he nor the treasurer of the company nor any other official has ever paid out one cent to procure underweights. Indeed, "the executive officials of this comapny," he says, "have no cognizance of the fraud said to have been perpetrated with enormous profits to our concern. What subordinates may have done is another matter. I do not know anything about that."

And herein lies the absorbing mystery of these sugar frauds. With one voice the higher officials of all the companies involved in practicing systematic fraud extending over several years, lift their eyes unto heaven and plead innocence and ignorance.

But while they are thus pleading we wish that they might be a little more explicit. Here is the question which none of them has answered satisfactorily: What interest could subordinates have in cheating the government out of its just dues when the profits of their crimes went to the companies exclusively?

If subordinates were not paid for their underhand work then we must presume that they cheated for the very love of cheating, for they could not possibly benefit financially if men "higher up" did not appreciate what they were doing and did not know, in fact, what was being done.

Such devotion to the interests of stockholders on the part of subordinates is quite u heard of. The problem is too much for us. We give it up.

But perhaps the government will not feel like giving it up until to probes around a bit longer. Phila. Inquirer.

ROLE OF THE COCOANUT

The Staff of Life to the Natives of Sea Washed Island.

It is more than a coincidence that the tree which furnishes a greater amount of available material to man than any other in the vast kingdom of vegetables is the first to spring up on the bare rocks of the newly arisen coral roof. The cocoanut, so formed that it may have floated halfway across the Pacific, is thus universally distributed throughout tropical islands.

It thrives best near the sea, seldom penetrating far into the interior. Its hard shell is a coat of mail for the embryo plant, enabling it to stand hard usage for a protracted period and locking up securely the precious life in miniature.

The fibrous husk which envelops it and is seldom seen on the market on account of the greatly increased bulk breaks the jar which would be inevitable should the hard nut fall unprotected from the tall tree to the ground sixty or ninety feet below.

Such a blow would scarcely fail to break the shell, occasioning the loss of the nourishing milk so necessary to the germ. The outer husk not only breaks the jar of a fall, but buoys it up on the water, while the tough outer cuticle is waterproof.

This is the tree which offers to man almost in the raw state all his necessities freely scattered where the warm seas and their borders offer a footing, and from it the humble native secured sugar, milk, butter, wine, vinegar, oil, candles, soap, cups, ladles, cordage, matting, thatch for roof and material for raiment, combining food, clothing and shelter in a single gift, continually making waste places habitable.—New Age.

Spain's Richest Industrial City.

It is not surprising that if Spain, always more or less agitated by internal dissensions, should have serious troubles, they should center in Barcelona. The chief seaport of the nation is here, the greatest industries are here, and here congregate in great numbers those grades of society which are generally opposed to any organized government. Here one finds the richest and the poorest—both disturbing elements, but for different reasons—one complaining of unequal taxation and the other of the restraints which the government places upon license.

Few people in America realize the industrial wealth of Barcelona or how much she patronizes us for raw material. Over a hundred and twenty-five thousand people are employed there in [illegible] cotton industry alone, and the [illegible] of this work amount to [illegible] five million dollars annually. [illegible] large amount of the raw cotton used is purchased in the United States and shipped from Galveston, Tex. So, after all, America is more or less interested in this section of Spain. Living is cheaper there than in any other city in Spain. Rents are marvelously low, and I saw a flat of fifteen rooms, with all modern appliances, on the Fifth Avenue of the city, for which the occupant paid forty-five per month. Indeed, a very excellent apartment of ten rooms can be obtained for twenty-five dollars. Labor, however, is correspondingly low, and the working class enjoys few luxuries. The Catalan works with an unceasing energy which rather startles the laborer of other parts of Alfonso's country. Although he listens to agitators, he is often quick to think for himself, and he fights for what he considers his rights with the same energy, and the government at Madrid will do well to heed the cry of this restless child before it is too late, for that cry is alreay finding an echo in northern Spain. Mrs. C. R. Miller in Leslie's Weekly.

CORN MOULDING IN CRIBS.

Thorough and Constant Ventilaltion the Only Remedy.

Cribbing soft corn is hazardous almost any season, but when the cribbing is done during warm weather, such as we have had through November, there is more than the ordinary risk. All market centres are complaining about an unusual percentage of soft corn this season, and it is giving all kinds of grief. When it is necessary to crib soft corn provision should be made for thorough ventilation.

The crib now most commonly built is the double form, with driveway between. The objection to this is that usually the cribs are sunk from two to four feet below the drive way, and this part of the crib is has no ventilation whatever. Then these cribs are made too wide to be easily ventilated, and they are nearly tight. A waterproof roof is essential, but aside from that, the more open the crib is the better-- for keeping either sound or soft corn. It is a fact, frequently commented upon, that corn stored in rail pens, such as may still be seen on many old farms, keeps better than when stored in modern miceproof, almost airproof buildings.

The thing to do is to ventilate, and the softer the corn the more ventilation becomes necessary. Narrower cribs are preferable, and by all means put the soft corn in open cribs. Two years ago I saw shellers using a pick on corn stored in a tight crib, while the same kind of corn piled up on the ground fed out in pretty fair condition during the winter. While I do not recommend that practice of storing corn, yet I do say, come as near to it as possible. Put the corn under a good cover and then ventilate.--L. C. Brown in N. Y. "Tribune Farmer."

XMAS TREES NO WASTE

Forester Says Happiness They Give Outweighs Damage.

Does the Yuletide with its demand for Christmas trees prove a menace to the American forests? Does it tend to denudation of the timberland?

These are questions asked of the United States forestry service by those interested in the conservation of national resources. The subject has received the serious consideration of the forestry bureau, and the reply has been sent out that there need be no danger of destruction if the cutting of young evergreens for Christmas trees is done with discrimination.

In young pine forests, it is stated that thinning out process can do no harm, but where trees are slashed in reckless manner the results are detrimental.

[illegible] ght a good deal about the [illegible] tter," said the chief [illegible] and have finally reached this [illegible] Trees are for use. There is no other use to which these trees could be put which would contribute so much to the happiness and good of mankind as their use for the children and family on Christmas day. So far as endangering the future life of our forests is concerned the effect is infinitesimal, compared with the destruction caused by forest fires and wasteful lumbering.

It is estimated that four million of Christmas trees are used annually. If planted four feet apart these could be grown upon 1400 acres of land, a small farm.

GOOD ROADS WORK

Pennsy. Arranging for Lectures by D. Ward King.

Following up its campaign in the interests of good roads in the states through which it operates, the Pennsylvania Railroad has arranged with D. Ward King, the Good Roads Expert, to deliver lectures on methods for making good roads.

For the past few months the Pennsylvania Railroad has made a study of the good roads movement and on November 18th its activities in this line were started with a meeting of its agents from the Williamsport and Susquehanna Division at Williamsport, Pa. These employes of the railroad were addressed by experts in the use of the King Split Log Drag, a device which farmers themselves make after patterns furnished free by D. Ward King. The meeting at Williamsport was followed by a meeting of the General Manager's staff in Philadelphia on December 17th, at which time there was a discussion on the methods for improving the roads radiating from the Company's stations. The object of all of this campaign is to make the roads to the railroad passable so that farmers can receive and deliver freight during all kinds of weather.

There are approximately 99,000 miles of country roads in the State of Pennsylvania, and of the total only 2,000 miles are macadamized. In view of the fact that it will cost approximately $10,000 per mile to macadamize these roads, the solution of the problem of improving the country roads in the State of Pennsylvania lies in the employment of less expensive means. It is to introduce such methods to the farmers that the railroad has undertaken its good roads campaign.

Campaign Expenses Compared.

Several days ago we received a letter from Mr. C. E. Blake, of Port Matilda, a valued subscriber of the "The Republican", asking why, since we had called attention to the fact that Mr. C. LaRue Munson had spent over $32,000 in the recent campaign, we had not also explained how much was spent by his opponent, Judge Robert von Moschzisker. Mr. Blake further asked whether we regarded it as strictly fair to our many readers to refer to Mr. Munson's campaign fund and ignore that of his successful rival.

Mr. Blake's inquiry is an entirely proper one. He is right when he remarks that we should not have dwelt on Mr. Munson's campaign expenses and made no reference to those of Judge von Moschzisker. It was our duty, just as Mr. Blake no doubt considers it to be his, to condemn the extravagant use of money in politics. We called attention to the amazing fact that Mr. Munson contributed over $32,000 in a single campaign. We repeated this, hoping that Mr. Munson's confession might serve as an example of the folly of the man with a barrel and a mania for an office.

Consideration for the feelings of some of those who with the best of motives voted for Mr. Munson prompted us to refrain from making a comparison of the amounts spent by the two candidates. Mr. Blake asks us for this information and we therefore give it as is shown by the official records at Harrisburg.

Mr. Munson spent $32,308.76.

Judge von Moschzisker spent $3,100.

Comparison of these figures should cause every Republican who voted for Mr. Munson to pause and reflect on the wisdom of his course at the polls. Every such Republican should ask himself how $32,000 could be legitimately expended in a few short weeks.

Seventy-three Years Young.

Colonel Wesley R. Andrews, Republican State Chairman, was seventy-three years old on December 23. To a host of personal friends he is seventy-three years young. Time has thinned his locks and strewn them with silver. Advancing years have robbed him of some of the vigor which in numerous political battles enabled him to work forty-eight hours without closing an eye. But time and advancing years have failed to change the genial smile and the hearty greeting which have made for him so many warm and lasting friends.

It has been the lot of few men to live through a period of so many political battles as has Colonel Andrews. His has been a wonderful opportunity to meet and learn to know men of all spheres in life. It is no exaggeration to say that there is hardly a town or village in Pennsylvania but what Colonel Andrews knows one or more residents by sight. In every town, it might be truthfully said, he has some personal friends. They rejoice with him in celebrating the seventy-third birthday anniversary and join with us in wishing that he might live until his years are multiplied by two and then some.

Loyalty to one's friends is a trait of which any man might well be proud. In his day and generation of politics Colonel Andrews has often been attacked. At times his actions have been subjected to bitter criticism. Such is the penalty of the man in public life, especially the man who has been conspicious in a State for many years torn asunder by factional warfare.

Not even the most prejudiced critic of Colonel Andrews has ever charged him with disloyalty to his friends. Early in the career of Senator Penrose Colonel Andrews became associated with him. Side by side they have worked, each jealously guarding the interests of the other.

Much of Senator Penrose's success must be credited to the loyal, unselfish aid rendered by Colonel Andrews. To the latter now entering upon his seventy-fourth year, it must be a matter of keen satisfaction to look backward and know that he has been true to a trust and that he has well served his leader.

Here's congratulations to Colonel Andrews. Here's to your good health and may your seventy-three years be but the beginning of a long life to come.

MADE MATTERS WORSE.

Her Effort to Correct Her Error About Charles and Mary Lamb.

Charles Lamb, the beloved Elia of the essays, wrote both tragedies and comedies, but was not a successful playwright. When his farce "Mr. H." was produced at the Drury Lane theater it failed conspicuously, and the genial author, who was in the audience, himself joined with companionable vigor in hissing it.

It is, indeed, an airy trifle, too slight in texture for the professional stage, but it has proved a charming play for amateurs. At a recent performance by a college dramatic society a little dialogue took place between two ladies in the audience which would certainly have delighted Lamb himself could he have heard it.

"'Mr. H., a farce in two acts by Charles Lamb,'" read one of them from her program. "Do you know, I had quite forgotten that Lamb was a dramatic author."

"Oh, my dear," exclaimed her neighbor, with a superior smile, "of course he was! Surely you must remember that he and his sister collaborated with Shakespeare."

"Collaborated with Shakespeare!" exclaimed the first speaker, startled out of her politeness. "Ridiculous! What could have put such an idea—Oh, you must be thinking of the 'Tales From Shakespeare,' by Charles and Mary Lamb."

There was mirth in her voice, and the superior person, flushing, perceived that overhasty "cramming" for the occasion had led her into error. She tried to retrieve herself.

"I did not mean collaborated with him, of course," she explained loftily. "That was merely a slip of the tongue. I meant translated him." — Youth's Companion.

AN ESKIMO CHURCH.

The Sealskin Sweatbox Finally Went to the Dogs.

The missionary sent to the States for a magic lantern and the necessary slides. Thirteen months later they reached him.

Everything in Baffin Land dates from that ever memorable magic lantern exhibition. From 300 miles around the expectant Eskimos came in behind their dog teams to participate in the wonderful event. The sealskin church was filled to overflowing. The spectators were packed as closely as sardines in a tin. The scent of sperm oil and blubber and sweat soaked furs mingled in the air. Although the thermometer outside registered 40 degrees below zero, the perspiration poured in streams down the faces of the enthusiastic audience. And when the straggling list of arctic explorers who have touched at Cumberland sound have long since been forgotten the recollection of that magic lantern show will linger in the minds of the Eskimo from [illegible] to Cockburn Land.

But a few nights later a sad fate befell the sealskin church. It was eaten up by a pack of hungry Eskimo dogs. These savage creatures, starved almost to death, made a raid on the edifice during a blinding snowstorm. Managing to get on top of the roof, they soon tore holes in the sealskin covering, and, in spite of the exertions of the missionary and his entire congregation, they actually ran away with the greater portion of the frozen skin, which, at a safe distance, they proceeded to devour—Everybody's Magazine.

Lingering Superstitions.

"Will a lucky gentlewoman give an unlucky one a tiny mascot to bring luck?" runs an advertisement in an English paper. "Here was a poor soul—for if there is a creature on the face of the earth whose fate calls for pity it is a gentlewoman who is down—keeping in her poverty some of that superstition or faith, whatever it may be called, which is the only thing that keeps misfortune from crushing the sufferer. If only she could get the right charm she might induce fate to look kindly on her. People call this a practical age, but evidences of superstition continue to appear. A lawsuit not long ago revealed the fact that an astrologer kept a motorcar and had a fine house, etc., all of which came out of the proceeds of a zodiacal magazine.

As Exemplified.

Having given his order twenty minutes before and seeing no indications that his dinner was ready, the man with the sparse whiskers beckoned to a waiter.

"My friend," he said, "perhaps I have made a mistake. Is this a pay as you enter restaurant?"

"No, sir," responded the young man in the white apron, yawning. "This is a dinner cooked while you wait restaurant."

Thereupon he resumed his dreamy, contemplative attitude, and the man with the sparse whiskers waited some more.—Chicago Tribune.

A Reply to Gladstone.

"Gladstone had no great scientific knowledge," said an English writer, "and at a dinner, when Faraday described an important new scientific discovery, the premier showed indifference.

"'After all,' he said, hiding a yawn behind his hand, 'what use will it ever be?'

"'Why,' said Faraday, 'there's every probability, sir, that some day you'll be able to tax it.'"

THE PROPER COURSE

Information of Priceless Value to Every Bellefonte Citizen.

How to act in an emergency is knowledge of inestimable worth, and this is particularly true of the diseases and ills of the human body. If you suffer with backache, urinary disorders, or any form of kidney trouble, the advice contained in the following statement will add a valuable asset to your store of knowledge. What could be more convincing proof of the efficiency of Doan's Kidney Pills than the statement of Bellefonte people who have been permanently cured?

Mrs. James Rine, 239 W. High street, Bellefonte, Pa., says: "Some years ago I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Green's Pharmacy Co. and their use cured me of kidney complaint and backache that had caused me no end of suffering. At that time I told of my experience in a public statement and I now take pleasure in confirming that testimonial. The relief Doan's Kidney Pills gave me has been permanent and I have had no further need of a kidney medicine."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's and take no other.

A Compliment to the Minister.

In Albert Dawson's work, "Joseph Parker—His Life and Ministry," there are some anecdotes of the famous minister of the City temple. We are told that what Dr. Parker regarded as, in its own peculiar way, the best compliment he ever received came from an omnibus conductor. The vehicle was crossing Holborn viaduct, and when it came to the City temple a passenger alighted.

"That's the man, and that's the place," said the conductor, indicating Dr. Parker's church. "I went there once, and I enjoyed myself so much that I'm going again the first night off I have. We laughed, and we cried, and we had a rare time. You see," the conductor continued, "he doesn't make religion so —— serious."

Seeds Planted In Eggshells.

Fill half an eggshell with good rich earth, stick in a seed or two, stand the shell up in a box of earth, keep it warm and moist, and then, when you think you can trust the weather out of doors and the seeds have sprouted, you knock the shell off and put the little ball of earth into Mother Earth, and there you are. Not a root has been disturbed, and if you choose a favorable time for transplanting there will not be a wilted leaf to retard the growing of the plant.

Painted Lips.

The "Personal Recollections of Sutherland Edwards," English music critic, records that after the peace of 1815 it used to be the rule for every hussar to wear a black mustache, and those who had neither a black mustache nor a fair one which they could dye were required to paint the semblance of a black mustache on their upper lip.

Moshannon

Here we are in a new year and we wish everyone a happy and prosperous year.

Among those of our people who spent Christmas away from home were: Frank Vielhdorfer, William Williamson, Clarence Lucas, Delmer Schnars, James Culver, Minnie Beightol, Rita Lucas, Mrs. Bestiman, Jennie Lucas and Joe Gleason. And of those who returned home for that day were: Eva and Minnie McGowan, Elizabeth and Laura Williams, Martha Kerin, Brigie Ward, Mary Lomison, Morris Gleason, Paul McGowan, Ed Tubridy, Bruce Lomison, Loyd and Gled Williams and Wes Bickett.

During the vacation period, the school rooms received a new coat of paper, which adds very much to the appearance and comfort of the halls of learning where teacher and pupils are compelled to exist day after day.

Howard.

In the special article in "The Republican" in the issue of two weeks ago, the name of Ira C. Johnson, the carriage builder, was inadvertently omitted by the writer. Mr. Johnson's shop is located on Black Street next to the office building of Dr. O. W. McEntire, where he is continually employed in doing repair work on all kinds of vehicles and building anything from a wheel-barrow up to a coach. He is a capable and efficient workman and turns out only the highest grade of work and at reasonable prices. Being gifted with a talent for music Mr. Johnson is much in demand for special church music and entertainments.

Another place of business that should have been mentioned is the up-to-date millinery store of Miss Mittie Lucas, near the passenger station. Miss Lucas personally selects her stock of material in the city and while there picks up all the latest styles and designs in the art so dear to the hearts of the women folks. A noteworthy feature of this place is that her prices are within the reach of all.

The Christmas and holiday season passed very quietly here and at the same time the usual good cheer prevailed at all times. The Christmas snow brought delight to the hearts of many and the short period of sleigh riding was much enjoyed. The Christmas holidays brought many of our young folks home from the schools and colleges and others who have sought to make their living in other parts of the country were happy guests under the home roof for a brief period. The flames had gained some headway when discovered, but the landlord, Charles McMurtrie, with rare presence of mind, smothered the fire. The room was badly damaged.

The turnout of fantastics on Saturday, New Year's day, was not as large as was anticipated owing to the cold weather and snow. However, those who braved the weather spared no pains in getting up something original and entertaining and it was one of the best parades we have had for some time. After parading the streets of Howard the boys went to Eagleville.

Some of the local consumers succeeded in laying up their stock of ice last week. It was of a good quality and of a thickness that is most desirable. They doubtless remember the lesson of last year in not taking the first that come.

CHIMPANZEE FOR DR. FURNESS

He Will Study its Intelligence With Professor Witmer.

A chimpanzee for Dr. W. Howard Furness arrived several days ago on the steamship Haverford, and was sent to the doctor's place at Wallingford. The chimpanzee will be used in studies that Dr. Furness and Professor Lightner Witmer, of the University of Pennsylvania, are pursuing on the intelligence of monkeys. The chimpanzee was accompanied by a young orang-outang for company.

Professor Witmer and Dr. Furness have been studying for several months an orang-outang, which the latter brought with him from Borneo last spring. It was the interest aroused by this study that led Professor Witmer to go to see Peter the Monkey on his recent visit to a theatre here.

Professor Witmer said that his studies did not bear on the question of evolution, and did not lead to the conclusion that monkeys were the forefathers of men. This theory, he said, lay entirely in another field of investigation. He had come to the conclusion that anthropoid apes are the most intelligent of the animals, approaching very closely to man in this respect. He said Peter the Monkey was about as intelligent as an ordinary child. He and Dr. Furness expect to make an extended study of animal behavior confining themselves to the primates—monkeys and apes. He said that one of his students is now watching a macacus ragus that came from Java. This animal is at the University of Pennsylvania. The macacus is of a lower grade of intelligence than the other monkeys.

Passengers on the Haverford said that the chimpanzee had acted in a highly intelligent manner, and in fact, had seemed to prefer human society to that of his orang-outang companion. George McCreath, of Harrisburg, made friends with the little orang-outang, and he was tried before a mock court on the charge of having alieneated its affections. Dr. Charles W. Hitchcock, of Detroit, was judge. Dr. B. W. Stone was attorney for the prosecution and Vincent Bodine for the defense. Mr. McCreath was convicted on testimony of the chimpanzee. Phila. "Ledger".

Westerners in the War.

All the flags save one captured from the enemy in the Wilderness were taken by Western regiments. The 24th Michigan captured the colors of the 48th Virginia, the Fifth Wisconsin those of the 25th, the 20th Indiana, those of the 55th, the Seventh Indiana, those of the 50th Virginia, the Fifth Michigan those of the 13th North Carolina. The Eighth Ohio and the 14th Indiana retook Rickett's guns.

"The men from the West were probably no braver man for man than those of the East," says a writer in the Atlantic Monthly, "but I think their success was wholly because so many of the men were woods wise. From their youth up, both by day and night, they had roamed through woods under all sorts of sky and in all sorts of weather, and so their depths had no terror for them. Like their enemies, they were at home in the timber and could make their way through it almost as well by night as by day.

"I have often thought that perhaps it was this common knowledge of the woods that gave our Western armies so many victories. A Confederate line coming on or rising up suddenly and breaking into their sharp, fierce yells did not greatly surprise or set them quaking. And yet although all my boyhood was passed in the grandly deep, primeval forests of Ohio, I am free to own that I never heard that rebel yell in the woods of Virginia that its old fields behind us did not seem at once to become mightily attractive."

The Usefulness of Spiders.

Despite the fact that the spider, next to the mouse, is most violently stimulating to feminine sensitiveness, it is an insect of a very good character. It feeds exclusively upon other freshly killed insects, and they are the kinds denounced by sanitary authorities, the house fly being its favorite quarry. His service in reducing the numbers of this pest is considerable, because the spider is always busy and he is present in countless numbers. The reason why he is not more frequently seen is that he is retiring in his habits and shuns human society quite as much as that shuns him. He seldom bites anything but his food, and even when in self-defense he does assert himself, the result is no worse than a mosquito bite or a bee sting. The touching story of "The Spider and the Fly" was evidently intended to invite sympathy for the fly, but that was before Musca domestica had had his picture posted in the rogues' gallery of insect life.—From Leslie's Weekly.

Knew It Was a Canal.

Some of these youngsters who are studying physiology have as hard a time as their parents figuring out the terms used in that profoundly interesting subject. One little girl, according to her mentor, was asked the other day to name the three openings into the throat. For the benefit of the gentle reader who may not have studied his physiology recently it may be stated that the openings are the epiglottis, the esophagus and the alimentary canal.

The little girl had tried awfully hard to remember those names because she had a hunch that the teacher would ask her to give them. She started bravely.

"The epiglottis," she began and hesitated.

"Right you are," encouraged the teacher. "What then?"

"The—um—ah—sarcophagus?" she inquired a little dubiously.

"You mean esophagus, my dear," suggested the teacher. "And the third?"

"The Erie canal!" announced the little girl confidently and triumphantly.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Bucket Shop.

"Bucket shops"—a name now used to denote small "outside" stockbrokers or financiers not in membership with the Stock Exchange—were so called because when they first started in Chicago the only commodity dealt in by small speculators to any extent was wheat. The legitimate dealers would not handle an order for less than 5,000 bushels, and then a lot of places sprung up where men of limited capital could speculate with very small sums, and these men were spoken of contemptuously as buying and selling wheat by the bucketful; hence shops where a small business was conducted in grain on a margin came to be known as bucket shops. The term was finally extended to cover all brokerage offices where small lots of either grain or stock were bought and sold, and it was applied particularly to those places where both seller and buyer did not more than "gamble" on the rise and fall of stocks.

Bows on Men's Hats.

Why is it that a man's hat has a band, and why is it this band has a bow invariably on the left side?

The answer is that there was a time when a piece of cloth adjusted to the head and tied with a band of other material served for a headpiece. The reason the bow was always placed on the left side had its origin in the fact that in wielding a sword—an accomplishment possessed by nearly every one of consequence at one period of the world's history—the bow or rosette if placed on the right side would have been in the way. Its present day utility is that it keeps most men from wearing their hats hind side before, and, although with most hats that would not matter with most heads it does.—Chicago Record-Herald.

On the Moon.

The question "Could a man live on the moon?" has been put to an eminent astronomer, who replied: "I am afraid not. A man transplanted to the moon would find himself the lone inhabitant of a perfectly lifeless orb in which eternal silence reigns. He would have to manage without air, water or fire. He would not need to put windows in his house, for there is no wind, no rain, no dust, upon the moon. It has been truly and practically observed that the moon is apparently abandoned to death, nourishing no inhabitants, producing nothing resembling trees, flowers or beautiful things of any kind—useless, in short, except as a mass of extinct volcanic rubbish, which drags the sea into tides and reflects the sunbeams in moonlight."

The Dean's Retort.

One Sunday morning at Caunton church Dean Hole noticed a tipsy man in the congregation. He bore his presence until it was no longer possible and then came to a halt with the question, "Are you fit to remain in God's house?"

The man got up unsteadily and was helped to the door.

"James," said Hole after the service was over, "what did you do with him?"

The useful parishioner replied, "I put him on a tombstone, sir."

The indignant vicar's retort was, "Couldn't you have put him under it?"—London Mail.

DOING SOMETHING DESPERATE,

And After It Was Done Sylvia Really Felt Contented.

By JEANNE OLIVE LOIZEAUX.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

The moonlight and her beauty softened the scorn of her glance when she saw that it was Max who had been sent back for her. She sat alone in Jack Burroughs' stalled machine. Jack and his wife had walked in, being due at an important function.

"You!" Sylvia's tone matched the intention of her glance.

"Even I, Sylvia," he replied with a rueful grin. "Fate is sometimes decent. A fellow has to risk what welcome is coming to him."

"It was horrid of the Burroughes to send you, but they had to get to that dinner, I suppose! My ankle still refuses to let me walk far, or I'd have gone with them afoot."

Tall and fair, cap in hand, he was standing with an offered hand to help her down and into his own little runabout. But she did not move. His glance followed hers to the gleaming object held fearfully in her lap. He took both hand and pistol as she explained.

"Jack would leave it when I insisted on their going and sending back the first respectable person they met"—

"Thanks! Are you coming?" He pocketed the weapon. But she only removed her big hat and veil.

"You know why I'm afraid! You're worse than a pistol. I can't trust you." Her tone was quite serious. "Next time you ask me to marry you I shall do something desperate! I would almost prefer staying here alone. Oh Max, would you, for once, take me straight home? And behave? You used to be nice when we were children."

"I won't propose, in the car, I promise. But I will not take you straight home—it's too early—you and the moon are too divinely fair. I don't want to behave especially, but since I must I will. I will vary the program by asking you not 'Will you have me?' but 'Why is it that you won't have me? Come?'"

Finally she reached him her hand but without excuse he suddenly took her in his arms and lifted her to his car. For a few minutes they sped along with the June breezes freshening on their faces. At length he spoke frankly, quietly:

"Sylvia, let's talk it over. I may have annoyed you—I may have made a fool of myself imploring you to be mine times innumerable, like a comic opera hero with the same old song. I don't know how to say it many ways. It all comes to the same thing—marriage or not. But I love you."

It pleased him to be whimsical, and Sylvia laughed. It was a change from the dead serious, anyway. He was never modest about his real worth. He continued:

"I am lovable, too, with an affectionate disposition. What is the matter, Sylvia? Please tell me. I will not ask you again—in the car—I promised—and never again at all once I see you do not love me. You have never flatly denied that, you know."

He turned his face away that she might speak freely if she would. Not that she had ever been embarrassed with him; he wished she had. At last she spoke:

"You bring this on yourself. I don't feel polite. You always make me so irritable and unlovely. I want to fly when I see you coming. I came out with the Burroughses to be rid of you and to save them from each other's company. I can't tell you just why it is, but the sight of you makes me contrary, and I cannot say what you want me to."

Speeding a little more, he turned to her coolly.

"You are never unlovely, Sylvia. Just how do I irritate you?"

They glided on through the soft dusk between the dark, sweet breathing woods and lighter meadow lands. On and on they came, nearer the city, whose myriad lights seemed to flash toward them from the dim hills.

"And you make me think when I don't want to. It's like pushing something away that you do not want to come too close. I simply don't seem to want to be married. I"— She stopped short.

"Is that it? Of course you have to decide that. What is it you do want in your life, Sylvia? To grow old alone? Your aunt won't always live. Do you want to earn your own living? Do you know of anything that would be a satisfactory substitute for married love? Do you want to study some art or a profession—medicine, for instance? Do you want to be an old maid and remember that you had a lover who, man and boy, would do anything—die for you, live for you and with you and give you what happiness he could coax from the scheme of things? Don't I interest you? Must I lose my money or must I take sick and almost die or save somebody in some romantic stunt to make myself interesting? I want to know where I am, what I can do. Are you tired of seeing me about? I might go away a few years. Shall I?" She laughed at his ridiculous, half practical, half sentimental vein so characteristic of him.

"Perhaps I am just too used to you, Max. You used simply to say you were going to marry me. The last year you have teased me by asking me till you make me cross. I don't know just how I do feel. I can't seem to get any perspective on you—or on marriage at all. You seem to stand between me and understanding. I am not a coward, but think of the responsibility! See the Burroughes—always on the ragged edge of a quarrel, undivorced simply because the only thing they agree on is hating a scandal! If Kitty had said no they might both have been happy. It's a big thing—being responsible for a man's happiness, especially if one might get to care very much, and I have nobody of my own, really."

His pulses sang at her words, but he forbade himself to reach for the hand which lay on her lap ungloved.

"Really, Max, the uncertainty and being bothered and all have put me on the verge of—anything, lately. I even thought how soon that little pistol would decide things for me! If this goes on I shall certainly study medicine, or jump from a moving train, or let myself be carried off by Dick Benton!"

She certainly needed some one to look after her, he reflected. He remembered that the mother she never knew had died of a broken heart. This might make her a little bitter and afraid. She seemed to have finished speaking. He had determined what to do. He spoke in a most matter of fact way, dismissing sentiment.

"I want something I left at the bank," he said. "I have dad's key. Would you mind if I stopped there a minute and at the Leader office? I forgot a notice that must be in the morning issue."

They were entering the city. She acquiesced, her head a little dizzy, her heart sinking at his silence. Had she made him think she could never—care? Would he never ask her again? What she thought she was losing because suddenly precious.

When they were on their way home another fear stole over her. Had she unconsciously shown her heart? She wished for the mother she had never known—the lovely, sad mother they had told her of. They were entering the driveway.

He helped her out and walked to the door with her. With her hand on the latch, she looked at him timidly, wistfully, a new look for Sylvia.

"Good night," she just breathed. "They are all out yet."

"Just a moment, Sylvia," and he drew her by the hand from the porch, across the lawn, to the old elm where they had played as children.

"Sylvia"—he let go her hand and faced her—"you fear the responsibility? I do not! I will answer for your happiness, which is my own. Can't you believe me? I got mother's old ring from the bank. Now, for the last time, in spite of what you have said, I ask you to marry me. Will you, Sylvia?"

He stooped to catch her low answer, but the sound of voices and steps came from the porch.

"They are coming home," she whispered. He took her by the shoulders.

"Answer me, Sylvia!" Tears stood on her cheeks as she laughed a little, pushing him from her as she said:

"Yes, yes, yes!" He felt his arm about her, his kiss on her lips, his ring on her finger. And she was content.

When at last he was leaving her she whispered demurely:

"I said I would do something desperate—and I have—you are accepted! I deserve anything for being so rash! When shall you tell auntie?"

"Tell auntie to find the announcement in the morning paper."

Sylvia gasped. But what was the use of scolding about what was done?

An Ancient Industry.

It would be difficult to say where exactly and at what date the manufacture of cotton fabrics began. In comparatively modern times, says Country Life, it has become an industry of importance in Europe, but it has flourished in the east from a period too remote to admit of calculation. The Egyptians certainly used both cotton and linen materials, for fragments of such stuffs have been preserved among the other relics of their ancient civilization, and there is much reason to believe that the elaborate draperies of the Assyrians were cotton or muslins finely woven and of delicate texture. In China, too, and India the same kinds of material have been the common wear of the people from time immemorial. In fact, everywhere throughout the east cotton fabrics were produced and used long before the primitive Europeans had begun to develop any of the graces of civilization or indeed had ceased to be anything but skin clad savages.

Most Awkward.

An old, steady going farmer was accustomed to ride to the market town upon a rather bad tempered horse.

One day his man Bob brought the animal, which was especially vicious that morning, to the door, the horse trying to bite and kick and giving a good deal of trouble.

The farmer mounted the horse with some difficulty and began to walk it out of the yard when Bob, who still entertained ill feeling against the animal, picked up a stone and flung it at him with all his force; but, alas, his aim was erratic, and the missile struck his master on the head.

Half dazed for a moment, the farmer turned slowly in his saddle, and, not suspecting the real cause of the blow, he measured with his eye the horse's hind hoofs and his own head and, settling himself in the saddle again, started off with the remark, "Well, he allus was an okard beggar."—London Scraps.

NEW AUTO LAW

It is of Interest to Owners of Cars in Centre County.

The new automobile law went into effect with the beginning of the new year. It is of interest to all automobile owners in Centre County.

Instead of a straight license fee of $3 per machine, each must be registered according to horsepower. The fees are $5 for machines of less than 20 horsepower; $10 for more than 20 and less than 50 horsepower, and $15 for all over 50 horsepower. For motorcycles the fee is $2.

Under the reciprocity feature of the new law, machines from other States being operated temporarily in Pennsylvania will be allowed to go free for the same length of time, and under the same conditions as apply to Pennsylvania machines in their States. The usual period is 10 days.

Licenses are required for chauffeurs, at $2 a head, and each chauffeur must wear a badge issued by the State Highway Department, inscribed "Pennsylvania Licensed Driver." Owners driving their own cars do not need chauffeurs' licenses. No person under 18 years of age may operate a car except by special permission from the Highway Department.

The penalties are heavy. There is a fine of $100 or imprisonment of one year, or both, for operating a machine with any other than its own registry tag, and a like penalty for "joy riding" without the consent of the owner. To operate a machine while intoxicated is to court a fine of from $100 to $300, or imprisonment of one year, or both.

It is required that the horn shall be sounded when overtaking another vehicle or a pedestrian or equestrian, and at all crossings where the authorities have erected signs bearing the words, "Danger, Blow Your Horn." The machine, and if necessary the motor, must be stopped when the driver or rider of a horse signals to do so, and unnecessary sounding of signals and the use of the muffler cutout when passing other vehicles are prohibited.

The speed limits are as follows: In open country, one mile in two and one-half minutes; in dangerous, congested or builtup places, and where the authorities have erected signs inscribed "Danger, Run Slow," one mile in five minutes. It is unlawful to pass a street car on the side on which passengers are being let on or off. Except in parks no local speed regulations shall conflict with the State law, and no public road open to horses shall be closed to automobiles.

The penalties for exceeding the speed limit or running a car without a registration tag, or with an unlicensed chauffeur are: First offense, $10 to $25, or ten days in jail; second offense, $25 to $50, or 20 days in jail; third and subsequent offenses, $50 to $200 and 30 days in jail.

In every instance the accused may appeal to court from the decision of a Justice of the Peace or Alderman, and may leave his car as security if other bail is not at hand. The registered number is prima facie evidence of the responsibility of the owner thereof unless he can prove that he was not in the car at the time of the offense against the law.

Local treasuries get the fines for speed limit violations. All other fines and all registration and license fees go to the State Treasury to be expended for road improvement.

State Highway Commissioner Hunter has issued the following directions with regard to applications under the new law.

All applications for registration or license must be made upon the printed blanks supplied by the State Highway Department, and must be sworn to by the applicant, with the seal of the notary or Justice of the Peace attached. Applications should be sent direct to the department by the applicant and must in all cases be accompanied by the necessary fees. Remittances should be payable to Joseph W. Hunter, State Highway Commissioner.

The registration number tags and licensed drivers badges are furnished by the State Highway Department without extra charge. No number tags except those supplied by the Highway Department may be lawfully carried upon the vehicle, except by non-residents, under the reciprocity feature of the law. No city, county, borough or township can lawfully impose any fee or require any local license or registration.

OH YOU CHRISTMAS TURKEY!

Hats off! The gobbler's passing by.
See him show off his red necktie.
What a bay winder! Oh, what a strut!
See his bronze wings flash open and shut!

Gob, you're a dude. You dandy sport, you,
Dressed in gold bronze and big fan tail too!
No sport on Broadway can prance like you do.
Ah, there, you dandy, you pretty peach, you!

Oh, you plump turkey! My, you're a dream!
Oh, juicy breast meat, richer than cream!
Stu'fin' and gravey—my, but you're fine.
Roast pig for England, but turkey for mine!

Say, there, my tailor, make that waist wide.
Need lots of room for turk Christmastide.
Now pass the turkey. Oh, you rich taste!
Life here without you would be a waste!

EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL SYMPTOMS OF FOWL DISEASE.

That diseased poultry may not be sold nor served and that a proper diagnosis may be made by inquirers we present a summary of the most marked symptoms of the common ailments of fowls.

Follow it in postmortems.

EXTERNAL SYMPTOMS.

Light weight, sharp breastbone, emaciation indicate lice, tapeworm, tuberculosis or breakdown from organic disease.

Sore head, swollen eyes with cheesy tumors, offensive discharge from nostrils, cankerous patches in mouth and throat indicate diphtheritic roup.

"Going light," pink comb, cheesy nodules on head, wing joints and feet, tuberculosis.

Head, skin, flesh tinged with yellow from absorption of gall by blood, jaundice.

Distended crop, pale or dark comb high fever, dropping of yellow, white, green urates, mucus and blood, cholera, extreme enteritis.

Light yellow round scales, crusts with moldy smell, extending from head over body and destroying plumage favus.

Light brown warts on head, comb wattles only, chicken pox.

Frequent attempts to lay, egg bound; to void constipation, both sometimes caused by tumor in abdominal cavity.

Most diseases of poultry are attended with loss of appetite and diarrhea.

INTERNAL SYMPTOMS.

Fermented crop indicates death from impacted, obstructed or paralyzed crop first, often from lack of water or grit or too liberal feeding; second, from dried grass, bone, constipation or tumor blocking the tract, and, third attending cholera and tuberculosis.

When lungs are dark and sink, congestion; if they contain cheesy growths, tuberculosis; if very red, full of blood and tubes are choked with bloody froth and yellow liquid, pneumonia.

If liver is soft and spotted gray, fatty degeneration; if very large, with cheesy growths, tuberculosis; if dark, flabby, extremely large and pitted with yellow ulcers, blackhead, cholera.

If heart is incased in heavy fat and full of blood, fatty degeneration; if heart sack is distended with liquid dropsy of heart.

If there is a blood clot on brain, apoplexy.

If veins are almost empty, gall bladder dark and distended, rectum and cloaca have dark lines, intestines contain clotted blood, are ulcerated and thickened, cholera.

An egg in the oviduct and the latter purple or bluish indicate gangrene.

Attempts to expel the egg brought on inflammation that resulted in death of the tissue.

Egg bound is caused by an abnormal egg, faeces or fat or a tumor blocking the cloaca or the drying up of the mucous secretions of the latter.

Hens found dead on nest generally die of egg bound and rupture. Those found under the roost mostly die of apoplexy caused by overfat.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS.

Too many do not osterize the grandpaps and grandmas of the flock. Sell off those hens before folks think you are in partnership with the town dentist and are trying to boom the store tooth trade.

It's a mystery to town people where the turkeys on adjoining farms go. When they see these big birds strutting in the fields they are just sure of getting a nice turkey for Christmas, when, lo, they get left! While the early turk gets the worm, the early city turkey huckster buys up all the turks.

To pick ducks quick and clean, first pick them as well as you can dry. Then scald, sprinkle with fine rosin and cover and let them steam. The rest is easy.

It is amusing to see a man carve his first goose when it's an old, fat one. It is wise to have the Baptist parson present to do the stunt. He knows the anatomy of waterfowl, and, besides, if a slab of goose grease drops into Miss Primpy's lap he is an expert at pouring oil on troubled waters.

One can hardly get to a farmer's stall when he has guineas for sale, they are growing so in popular favor. Guineas should be dressed like game. Simply pluck the breast.

Frozen mash should not be fed. Leftovers, especially with meat in them, are apt to be spoiled. Do unto your hens as you would have the "boardin' missus" do unto you.

There is something doing when pop can't find a turkey and surprises ma by bringing home a goose. If pop's a lawyer, the picking is done like fun.

When your hens don't lay when eggs are high don't think they have joined the trust. You let them trust in Providence for care while you snooze round and loaf somewhere.

HIS LEGAL AUTHORITY.

It Seemed to Fit the Case, and Joey Was Discharged.

There was consternation among the young folk. The "music" for the dancing at the picnic in the glen had got into trouble. No one ever considered any other "music" but Joey the fiddler. He was indispensable, but he was also erratic. In the old country Joey had been a schoolteacher and a man of considerable learning, but here he had fallen into evil ways. He was overfond of two things—a bottle and an argument. Having become engaged in the latter on this day of the picnic, he broke the former over the head of his opponent and was haled away to the lockup. The young people called a hasty meeting and appointed a committee to wait upon Squire Nugent to secure the release of the "music" if possible. The squire was hearing Joey's case when the committee arrived. The spokesman respectfully explained the absolute necessity of Joey's presence at the picnic that day.

"That's a good soul, squire, I'ave me go," put in Joey.

The squire took down a ponderous lawbook and began thoughtfully to turn the pages.

"If you're lookin' for the legal authority coverin' my case, squire, ye'll find it in Byron," the prisoner suggested.

"Can you quote it?" asked the magistrate, with a twinkle in his eye.

"Aye, so I can," Joey promptly retorted. "It reads, 'On with the dance; let Joey be unconfined.'"

The squire adjudged Byron a competent authority, and Joey was unconfined.—Catholic Standard and Times.

Enjoying Himself.

A fond mother sent her small boy into the country and after a week of anxiety received the following letter:

"I got here all right, and I forgot to write before. It is a very nice place to have fun. A fellow and I went out in a boat, the boat tipped over, and a man got me out, and I was so full of water that I didn't know nothin' for a long while.

"The other boy has to be buried when they find him. His mother came from her home, and she cried all the time. A horse kicked me over, and I have got to have some money to pay the doctor for mendin' my head. It was broken a bit.

"We are goin' to set an old barn on fire tonight, and I am not your son if I don't have some real fun. I lost my watch, and I am very sorry. I shall bring home some snakes and a toad, and I shall bring home a tame crow if I can get 'em in my trunk."—London Globe.

Selling by Candle Time.

"It did me good," observed a young girl who had just returned from England, "to see in real life one of the old customs my grandfather used to tell me about—the burning of the time candle at an auction. In Berkshire the old custom still prevails, and when an auction is in progress and an article is put up for bidding a short length of candle is lighted as the bidding begins. The shouting continues until the candle burns out, and the last bid before it flickers its last is the one that takes the cake. I don't know but what it has an advantage over the 'Going, going, gone!' variety, but it is fearfully slow and un-American."—Exchange.

Necessary.

"Dear me," exclaimed the lady, "that's twice you have dropped that cut glass pitcher within five minutes!"

"I know it, ma'am," replied the maid, "but it didn't break the first time."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Isaac P. Miller, who is one of the most progressive men identified with the Provident Life and Trust Company, of Philadelphia, found time to get back to Bellefonte for Christmas. Before returning to the city he entered his name as a subscriber to "The Republican."

The remarkable offer by "The Republican" to furnish this paper and also the Philadelphia "Daily Inquirer" for one year for $3, for both, is making a decided hit in the county. By availing yourself of this offer you save $1 a year on the two papers. For those who have not taken advantage of the offer we would suggest that it not be put off too long. The offer terminates March 1st. Tell your friends about it.

Against Progress.

The commissioners of Centre county are having the court house at Bellefonte remodeled and enlarged, which, when completed, will be one of the finest public buildings in the centre of the state. They also will place an electric clock in the tower to replace the one that has served the people for over half a century.

This shows a spirit of progress, which is entirely adverse to that of some of the people of that historic town who have entered a remonstrance against paving one of the principal thoroughfares on account of the noise it would occasion.

This presents a striking difference between century-old Bellefonte and Patton, which only recently celebrated its 15th natal day. Here we have over one mile of paved streets and it is the delight of the inhabitants to hear the rumble of the heavily loaded vans and drays as they convey merchandise to supply the wants of thousands who trade at our shops, and we feel safe in saying that the mercantile establishments of Patton dispose of more goods in three months than the combined stores of Bellefonte do in a year. We like the noise of trade and traffic--it seems more like business. The whistles from a score of prosperous coal operations, as thousands of miners go to work, does not jar the nerves of any one. Not even the trolley cars, with their load of human freight, causes the least unpleasantness. We are too much occupied to hear the din and uproar of a young metropolis.

We know Bellefonte and all its people. It is a beautiful place and the citizens are noted for their wealth, culture and benevolence, and all that prevents it being one of the leading and most progressive towns in the state is the old-fogy ideas of a few (we are glad to say very few) of its inhabitants. Patton Courier.

The favors were beautiful hand-painted cards, the work of Cameron McGarvey. S. A. Keefer had the honor of being selected as toastmaster, and those to respond included Messrs A. A. Dale, E. J. Williams, David Washburn, Wilbur Barkholder, Harry Dickinson, J. C. Smith and Charles Lukenbach. The many nice things said about Mrs. Tanner and her cozy home were fully merited. What was done to the turkey was a caution.

Harrisburg Telegraph Almanac.

The first edition of the Harrisburg Telegraph Almanac, a yearbook for central Pennsylvania, was issued Christmas week. It is the most complete publication of the kind ever offered to the people of this part of the Keystone State. The almanac was issued because it was needed. It was designed on a plan all the Telegraph's own.

The Harrisburg Telegraph's almanac is to be issued annually and makes its bow for 1910. It is more than a mere annual publication, however, because it is a handbook of almost 100 pages, filled with all manner of interesting and valuable information about the state's capital city and the dozen or more thriving, populous counties in which Harrisburg's progressive daily circulates. The information one is accustomed to find in an almanac is a mere incidental in this publication because it treats of about every topic one could ask concerning Harrisburg and a great deal of value about its surrounding territory.

FOUR MILES AN HOUR

Rate Not So Easy to Walk as Many Imagine.

There is nothing that the average person believes more implicity than that he can walk four miles in an hour easily, says the New York Sun. Almost any one will say: "We were out walking for an hour and a half today. Let me see, four miles an hour; that makes six miles we went," and he is convinced that is the ground his party covered.

That same average person has only to try to walk four miles in 60 minutes to discover that it is good stiff going. There are many more folks who cover three miles in the time when they think they are going at the rate of a mile better than there are who actually know the pace they are making.

It is an easy thing to determine. For instance, one man started at 110th street, on Central Park West, and walked down alongside the park. He noted the time on his watch when he started and swung along at a gait that he fondly believed was a mile in ten minutes. That for instance, would be about one-half the speed that the average mile runner would make when he was fairly new to the game, but he would have to be trained for a time to do that.

The walker did'nt take out his watch until he had reached 90th street, the end of his first mile. Then he looked. It was 15 minutes almost to the second when he ended that mile.

This was a little of a shock, especially as there were only a couple of crosswalks in the way and there was a nice stretch of gravel path alongside the pavements on which to walk. But he started off again for the second mile. This time he walked steadily, using his hips, and eventually got striding at a clip that convinced him he was going at least four minutes better than the other time. At 70th street the inexorable watch showed 14 minutes for the second mile.

"And then I was all out," said the walker, "and I made up my mind I would'nt try to make time for the rest of my walk downtown. Those two miles in 29 minutes were about my best. Perhaps I could have done the two in a little better, but to go on for two more would have pulled the average down. It taught me something about that four miles an hour idea."

Wells in India.

The question of wells in India is complicated by the coexistence in each community of two castes—the purer Hindoos and Gonds on the one hand, the weavers on the other. No weaver may draw from the well of the Hindoos lest it be defiled, nor will the Hindoo drink from the hands or the well of a weaver. Thus it becomes necessary either to dig two wells or to depute a certain number of the Hindoo element to give water to their less exalted fellow villagers.

Almost Human.

"Oh, George," tearfully exclaimed his wife, meeting him at the door, "that parrot you brought home the other day"—

"What's the matter with him?" asked Mr. Ferguson.

"I don't know. He won't tell me. When I ask him what the trouble is he just swears dreadfully."—Exchange.

A Bright Boy.

"The gentlemen who came to see daddy said I was one of the most intelligent children they ever saw," said little Jack.

"Indeed!" said the proud mother. "Did you recite 'Little Drops of Water' for them?"

"No. I refused."—London Mail.
